The mystery in the death of Miss Elizabeth Carroll, who was drowned in Crystal Lake, Newton Centre, on Wednesday and whose body was found yesterday, increased to-day as the friends of the dead girl made an effort to ascertain the facts connected with the tragedy.

Miss Carroll was unusually pretty. She was seventeen years of age, but looked older. Her education at a business college, she had a position as a bookkeeper; she made her home with the family of Patrick Maria Williams, Groton No. 17, Langley road, Newton Centre. The girl was a distant relative of the policeman's wife.

Friends of the girl maintained to-day that she was not a flirt. She was a devoted Dr. George L. West, medical examiner, who examined the body, said that he could not find any evidence of foul play. He was so strongly convinced that it was a case of suicide that an autopsy was per-

Mat Found on Shore.

These marks, it was pointed out by the witness, were made by the teeth of a shark by the action of the water. The girl's clothing was not damaged in any way and a struggle with any one else had and a struggle with any one else had not taken place.

It was reported in Newton Centre today that a man whose rooming in the lake region of New York, in the lake region, definitely could be learned about this. It was learned that a man who had been a guide for a row with a man friend and that they then threw her into the water or saw her fall in.

Opposed to this is the fact that there are no boats in the lake. The boats are all privately owned and kept locked up. The boats are not for hire and the owners of the boats would have been

Mrs. Josephine Groth either knew or did not know the name of the girl or did not know she was anxious to tell that she knew when a reporter called at her home to-day. She said that Miss Carroll had started to visit a friend in Dorchester at 10 o'clock Wednesday morning, but she did not know the name of the friend. She said the girl had a very pretty face.

"Was Miss Carroll seen working lately as a housekeeper?" Mrs. Groth was asked.

"No," she replied. "I don't know."

"Did she marry new friends?"

"No," she replied. "I don't know."

"Was she in love, or was there any one paying particular attention to her?"

"No," she replied.

"Do you know of any reason why she should have been killed?"

"No," she replied.

"There was not the slightest reason so far as I know. I'm sure she didn't kill."

The girl's body was found at 8 o'clock yesterday afternoon, and Mr. West said he thought it was about 10 o'clock when he thought of about twenty-four hours. Wednesday was the day she was killed, he was sure. He said that the heat index had been affected.

Association of the two variables is represented graphically in Figure 1. The graph shows that the relationship between the two variables is non-linear. The relationship is positive, but the rate of increase in the dependent variable decreases as the independent variable increases. This is characteristic of a concave down relationship.

They returned from the fire a bringing 60 women and children, most from Cochrane. He describes conditions there as terrible and declares that the fire was the worst he has ever witnessed. The fire was a vast one, and the immediate relief work was put through.

Mr. Perry was a Mrs. Morille of a baby only five old and Mrs. Alfred Jorda of Hawkesbury with an infant less than a year old. The latter was a girl named and had to be sent to the hospital.

Reports to-day contradicted early tales to the effect that the town of Cochrane was completely destroyed around it, leaving it practically uninhabited. It was found that the town here and all other accessible points the fire left to rescue the survivors and that the town had been saved to the settlements.

Tell of Death and Destruction

Men balked and feared by hours of fighting with smoke and flames are being lost in Golden City in a steady stream with horrifying tales of death and destruction brought by the flames. The way that Connecticut people are great fire fighters, that day, possibly weeks, or elapse before anything approaching a rescue.

Melville, Min., previously reported destroyed, safe according to intelligence from the city, but it was not clear if from the flames by organizing the men and women who were working for hours to divert the course of the situation. They succeeded after many hours of them had dropped from exhaustion.

CONNECTICUT PEACHES CROP BUMPER ON

LEDYARD, Ct., July 14.—Indicated point to a peach crop from one-third to

The Grand Trunk Railroad has secured a patent against the New York, New Haven & Hartford in the war for location at the mouth of the Connecticut river at Wrentham on the other side of the Rhode Island bay, by getting work laid up which the Connecticut was never intended as freight houses intended to obstruct the right of way of the Southern New England, the corporate name of the Grand Trunk, proposed branch through that section.

Major James Mullins of Woonsocket, at the request of John H. Mendenhall, Providence vice-president of the Southern New England, ordered John P. Bayne, inspector of buildings at Woonsocket, not to issue a permit to the New Haven to build on the Woonsocket part or the Acushnet in question.

New Haven Was Hustling.

At the same time Mr. Murdoch has died. With the Superior Court at Providence a petition asking that the property in Woosneck be sold to satisfy the claims of the New England right of way. This petition is returnable September 18 at Providence.

The New York Herald has been rushing work on the new freight boats as rapidly as possible, keeping several ones on the job seven days a week. The plans laid out by the directors of Woosneck by the New York Herald called for a fleet of two big freightmen, one thirty-five feet high. One of these is to be located in Woosneck, the other extending south of the town. The latter is to be built over the State line into Massachusetts nearly blocking the right of way elected by the Southern New England.

New England was to go over the proposed route of the thirty-five-foot structures mounted on the trestles. The new New England must have a bridge over the river, a bridge over the river and yards, a costly and bothersome one.

To dodge the freight houses the Southern Railway Company had a plan for a location, which would mean obtaining a new location for the bridge, the point at issue being that the bridge was to be located at the Southern Gate Station.

The Southern applied to the Massachusetts Railroad Commission for such change of location. The commission was notified. George W. Bishop, a member of the Massachusetts Commission, says:

So far as Massachusetts is concerned, the commission has no objection to the proposed complications in the trunk trunk's location. The commission has no objection to the proposed change over certain property to the trunk trunk's location. The commission has no objection to the proposed change into graveyards; but the trunk trunk's location is the matter at issue.

The plan for the trunk trunk's location in Southern's location in Massachusetts was changed my plan. At the proper time I propose to go to the people of Massachusetts and say the facts before them. The incident was not the answer will be.

If the members of our Legislature want to fight me they can have all the fight they want. They will not run away from a political fight yet.

This fight for right legislation has hardly begun yet. It's only in its infancy. The people have never taken sides ready at any time they want to start in.

I've been hearing from the people and I know they have a pretty good idea of the situation at the State House.

Will Stand on Record.

If the Legislature of Massachusetts

Wants to go before last people in the crowd, the record and mine, it's ready. Let them start at once and they'll find me right on the job all the time.

My nomination papers have been: accepted. I am a candidate for reelection. That's my answer to the Legislature.

I shall be at the State House tomorrow, the next day and all next week. If the Legislature will, I'll go through with the people and with me they'll find out before long that they are slightly mistaken.

I was elected on a platform that proposed certain things to the people of the State and I propose as far as I am personally able, assisted by the Legislature, to carry out the constitution, to see to it that those things are carried out every platform from which I spoke are carried out.

A recent Legislature has no record. I don't know what they did. They'll find me standing where I stood nine months ago when I promised, if elected, to do what I did.

The body of a woman was found entangled in a net wading today on the beach at Wood Island Park, on the Winthrop side. It is thought she was accidentally drowned.

Governor Evans had a narrow escape from a serious accident today when he started on his tour of inspection of the Coast Guard in the harbor forts. He missed his footing on the stairs and would have been hurled into the water had he not been rescued by a sailor. It was the quick work of John G. Mitchell, a fish boy, who grasped the Governor by the collar and held him until he was able to get to his feet. Mitchell then took the Governor to the Coast Guard barracks and called for the Governor's assistance.

It was little time when the Governor arrived at the Coast Guard barracks and the District Commander Patterson took the launch of Fort Andrews at Peddler's Island. As the launch started, the Governor slipped and would have gone into the water but for the quick work of Mitchell.

Clumsy to Coast Guard

The Governor in a very heavy coat, but young Mitchell pluckily clung to his coat collar and himself faced the danger of going overboard with the State's official excitement. He was, however, not to be shaken on his feet and finally struggled to safety. Then, after a moment's pause, he asked the boy his name. "Young Mitchell," after he had launched the boat. The Governor, in the light of the fact that the boy was a member of the Spectator, he looked at what was underneath his hat before he started down any ill-effects.

A salute of 17 guns announced the Governor's arrival. He then, after a short time, began his inspection of the Coast Artillery and the various regiments of the State. The big gun practice, which was under way in his honor to effect the effect of the cannon, had been a success. The Governor, who had exploded, the Governor stood on the main deck of the ship, and he was the first to see the gunnery. He complimented the splendid work of the gunnery officers taken from the ranks of the city.

WOMEN AND CHILDREN DRIVEN FROM SCHOOL BY RED TAPE BLUNDER

Women sleeping on sidewalk outside the Washington school building as the South End firemen were driven from the building by special policemen. They brought their mattresses down again from the roof and got what rest they could after being awakened.

Thanks to somebody's blunder and the thousands of unemployed men for effort and tape, 500 women and children, who had been invited to be guests for the night of the city on the roof of the Washington school building in the West End were "shut out" of the building by special police officers and school officials.

Fully 500 mothers and babies were awakened from their slumbers on the roof of the building and half awake or partly dazed with sleep were hustled down the stairways to the streets.

Just who is to blame for this choice question of housing for the homeless is not known. Attempts to fix responsibility for the blundering blunder of the night are being made by the school officials and the police officers.

Invited by City. Through Mrs. John Anderson, president of the Boston Section of the Council of Jewish Women, permission had been obtained from Acting Mayor Collins for the use of the roof as a sleeping place for the homeless.

News of this welcome order from the West End rapidly, and by 8:30 last night women and children had found their way up to the top of the high building. Spreading their blankets over the roof, they were sleeping peacefully.

Mulvey on the Job. Mr. Mulvey, custodian of the city schools, had arrived, and not finding the women present who had been in charge of the preceding night, ordered every one turned out of the building. This was in spite of the fact that the women had been invited to be guests for the night.

After had been detailed to spend the night on the roof, Mrs. Mulvey, a woman living in the neighborhood, was there to see that the women were not left alone. She was a woman of about 40 years of age and had been married for about 15 years.

BOSTON AMERICAN

80 AND 82, SUMMER ST., BOSTON, JULY 14, 1911

July Fourteenth--the Day That the Prison of the Bastille Was Torn Down

This is the Sacred Day Celebrated All Over the World by the Great French Nation

On behalf of many readers this newspaper greets and congratulates on this day the great French nation--a people famous in the past, powerful to-day and certain to be in the future, as in the past, leaders of humanity.

This day celebrates the tearing down of the prison of the Bastille, the beginning in earnest of the magnificent French Revolution. This is the day that marks the determination of the Frenchmen to govern themselves, own their national property and overthrow the preposterous Kings with their preposterous Divine Rights.

This is a day that should remind Americans of the greatness of France.

Think of the glorious names that stand out in every page of French history--statesmen, scientists, teachers, poets, philosophers, soldiers.

In every century of French history there is glory enough for the life of a whole nation. It is a fine procession that passes as the mind reviews French history.

Let us review a few of the names that all of the world knows. Charlemagne, the great King, son of that powerful "Berthe aux grands pieds"--would that we knew more about the mother of such a man.

In the shadow of that great name of Charlemagne stand the beautifully romantic name and story of Roland, and with Roland we think of Bayard, the type of French chivalry, courage and gentleness.

Then see Duguesclin, the ferocious fighter--no greater fighter ever lived. After the Spaniards held him prisoner for a while they were glad to let him go without ransom, sick of having him challenge and kill their best men every day in private combat to keep himself occupied.

And from the thought of Duguesclin pass to the gentle Rousseau. He could not fight anybody, except with his mind and his pen. He was physically timid and afraid. Yet he stood high among those that threw down forever the fighting monstrosities whose orders such men as Duguesclin obeyed.

And Napoleon, son of Corsica, developed in France. It was he who, standing by the grave of Rousseau, said that without Rousseau there would have been no Revolution and no Napoleon.

And Voltaire, the greatest FIGHTING INTELLECT EVER BORN IN THIS WORLD--in his achievements there are honor and glory enough for a whole race of men.

And Jean Bart, the great fighter of the sea. The English among all their naval bulwarks cannot show his superior.

And Joan of Arc, that beautiful spirit. She lived for her country and was burned alive because of her steadfastness. Her life and death forever rebuke the fools that proclaim woman's inferiority.

And Madame Curie, alive and hard at work in our own day, ranking as a scientist with any man living, and in the care of her children, whose clothes she makes and whose education she personally supervises, ranking with any mother in any country. How splendidly she and millions and millions of other French mothers refute the slanders that dull minded Americans studying France through windows of Paris cafes cast upon the French family life.

And Moliere, the greatest wit that the world has produced, and Rabelais of great power, Corneille, Racine, the purest of poets; Boileau, the poet's teacher; La Fontaine, whose fables made kings ridiculous and laughable and helped the people's education before the Revolution came to wipe the kings out and educate the people finally.

Even among kings, usually very low in the scale of humanity, the French kings shine out. There was St. Louis, one of the most virtuous and well meaning men that ever lived--although not very useful. And Louis XI, perhaps one of the least virtuous and least well meaning of the kings that ever lived, but a great and useful man who gave unity of weights and measures to France, and by putting France under one thumb--his own--paved the way for government by the people. And Francis I, who blessed France by bringing the greatest artists to the French capital. And Henry IV, a clever politician as well as a great king, and a typical Frenchman of a certain sort who in his light cynicism declared, "Paris vaut bien une messe," when he changed from Protestant to Catholic. Louis XIV, in spite of his colossal vanity, did much for the greatness of France, and even poor, fat, foolish Louis XVI, who lost his head because Fate made him a king, would have been quite content to live as a peaceful locksmith far from Marie Antoinette and the guillotine towards which that lady's foolishness led him.

Every kind of greatness stands out in the names that shine in the history of France, such names as those of Becker, the patriotic business man; Jacques Coeur, giving his millions to his country; Sully, to whose wise protective policy millions of French mechanics and manufacturers owe their prosperity; and Gambetta, the brilliant French Jew with the courage and intellect to deal with the most difficult conditions and the most complicated political dilemmas.

Victor Hugo, who supplied the French with inspiration, deserved even his own high estimate of himself, and French history produces thousands upon thousands of other finished intellects, daring spirits, men that can look with courage into the future, foreseeing the destiny of the human race, like Charles Fourier, the greatest intellect that France or any other nation has ever produced, or men like La Salle, with the courage and daring to explore here in America unknown material lands.

Read the life of any one or all of these men or of any one of thousands here unnamed, and you find a story of French greatness. France is a brilliant people, a thorough, exact people. The other nations have learned from France the arts, material and esthetic. Other nations have been educated by the French in political thought--our men of 1776, our Jeffersons, Franklins and Patrick Henrys were absorbing and repeating what the French had said and thought.

A very splendid nation is the French nation. This is the birthday of modern France. And on this fourteenth of July and on every fourth day of July it is a pleasure to recognize French greatness and the debt that every nation on this earth owes TO THE GENIUS OF FRANCE.

Rumsellers Favor Prohibition

This Appears to Be the Somewhat Strange Situation Down in Maine, but It Isn't so Very Strange When You Look Into It--Why Shouldn't the Liquor Dealer Be in Favor of Prohibitory Laws That Are Not Enforced?

You may have noticed in the newspapers a day or two ago that the Chief of Police of Portland, Maine, had again sent word to the saloonkeepers of the Forest City that they would have to CLOSE AND KEEP CLOSED.

Consider, for a moment, the promulgation of such an order in Prohibition Maine.

If Mr. Dresser's order is carried out--AND IT WILL BE CARRIED OUT IF MR. DRESSER MEANS BUSINESS--it will close from thirty to fifty open bars in the city of Portland, two of them next door to police headquarters. There are TWO HUNDRED places in Portland where liquor is sold.

The liberal element in Maine, that large body of the people which would like to have LICENSED AND REGULATED beer saloons take the place of the vile dens which, as Admiral Evans testifies, sell men poison instead of liquor, is almost convinced that the greedy unlicensed dealers of the State, AIDED AND ABETTED BY WEAK OR WICKED PUBLIC OFFICIALS, have quite made it impossible to take prohibition out of the State Constitution this year.

If the prohibitory law were enforced in Maine without fear or favor such enforcement would speedily lead to local option.

In Bangor, public officials tell us that the law is not enforced there because public sentiment is against its ENFORCEMENT. Doesn't that seem to you like STRANGE LANGUAGE for public officers who have sworn to uphold and enforce ALL THE LAWS? Doesn't it seem to you that some official higher up ought to TAKE COGNIZANCE of that sort of talk, and that sort of official inactivity?

The Sunday AMERICAN has been looking into this strange situation in the State of Maine. We have taken a few photographs of the public saloons there. We have talked with some of the negligent or indifferent public officers. The pictures will appear in the Sunday AMERICAN. There will be an interesting story with them.

Everybody in Maine ought to have a copy of the Sunday AMERICAN. Everybody in New England will find the Maine story informing. They vote on the Prohibitory amendment September 11, and the Prohibitionists are zealously at work. THE LIQUOR DEALERS SEEM TO BE HELPING THEM.

Buy Some Shares in a Baby

The Massachusetts Infant Asylum, One of Boston's Most Worthy Institutions, Needs and Deserves Help

The babies of to-day are the men and women of to-morrow. If our actions are directed either by a business brain or a compassionate heart we are bound to look after the babies.

This generation could leave no better legacy to future generations than SOUND, HEALTHY men and women grown from the myriads of little babies of to-day.

Among the many admirable institutions in Boston is one that pays exclusive attention to babies--babies that NEED care and attention. It is the Massachusetts Infant Asylum. How many good men and women this institution has given to the world within the forty years of its existence could not easily be computed. It is safe to hazard that they would reach up into the thousands.

Babies that have gone into this hospital skin and bones and with the vital spark of life so low that it could be blown out with a breath, have been coaxed with skill and care back to health and sent out into the world to become useful citizens.

A tiny skeleton, with red hair and a faint flicker of life, was carried into the institution a few weeks ago. A good doctor and a good nurse took it in hand. The death-dealing war rolled over the city. But the doctor and the nurse were determined to save that red-headed baby. It was coaxed with an electric fan. It was bathed and fed with discriminating care. And the red-headed baby was pulled through.

The unprecendented hot spell dwindled the resources of the institution very fast. To continue its excellent work it must have at least $10,000 AT ONCE.

It would be better to BUY SOME SHARES IN A BABY than in some wildcat mine.

When some thoughtful, progressive people of Boston first took up this work of looking after babies that couldn't look after themselves and had no one else to do it, their work consisted chiefly of getting homes where the little folk could be boarded.

Now the hospital work is a strong and highly important adjunct of the enterprise. The work is growing. New buildings are needed. It is the intention of those who have the institution in charge to change its name to the Massachusetts Infant Hospital, that more correctly describing it than the present name.

The institution is located at No. 150 Chestnut avenue, Jamaica Plain. There is little MORE WORTHY work being done in this country than that of this non-sectarian institution. Those wishing to help it should address Mr. Walter Runnells, Jr., treasurer, No. 19 Congress street, Boston.

An article upon the work done by this institution, giving additional and interesting details, will be published in next Sunday's AMERICAN.
